

European Elastin Meeting 2026

DIAGNOSIS, DAMAGE REPAIR AND TREATMENT

18-21 August
Copenhagen, Denmark

www.eem2026.org

Welcome

EEM 2026 will unite leading experts in (bio)chemistry, medicine, physics, material sciences, and computational sciences from academia, industry, and clinical practice to explore a wide range of topics around elastin and related ECM proteins, their role in health and disease, and potential in regenerative medicine.

The program, designed by both local and international scientific committees, will span key areas such as diagnosis, damage repair and treatment of elastin-related conditions by focusing on elastin and elastic fiber biosynthesis (elastogenesis), degradation, disease, turnover, regulation, and interaction with other ECM proteins, as well as tissue regeneration.

EEM 2026 aims to serve as a dynamic forum for discussions and networking among senior researchers, early-career scientists, students, and companies.

The local organizing team looks forward to welcoming you in Copenhagen.

Programme

Elastin and Elastic Fibers: Structure, Assembly, and Function

This session will explore the molecular structure of tropoelastin, its assembly into elastic fibers, and its role in tissue elasticity and function in organs like skin, blood vessels, and lungs.

Elastin in Vascular, Pulmonary, and Skin Aging and Disease

This session will discuss the role of elastin in age-related tissue degeneration and its involvement in diseases such as atherosclerosis, emphysema, and skin aging.

Elastin-Related Signaling

This session will cover how elastin activates cellular signaling pathways that affect tissue remodeling, inflammation, and disease progression.

Elastin-Based Biomaterials for Tissue Regeneration

This session will discuss the use of elastin-derived biomaterials in regenerative medicine, including scaffolds for skin, vascular, and musculoskeletal repair.

Emerging Techniques to Study Elastin and Elastic Fibers

This session will highlight new imaging, genetic, and biochemical methods for studying elastin and elastic fibers in tissues and diseases.

*A more detailed programme will be available by the end of 2025.
